15-17 October: London calling everyone who is against the war

The European Social Forum (ESF) is a giant gathering of people from across Europe against war and privatisation. It is the next stop for the European peace and anti-war movements. The Florence ESF in 2002 was the launchpad for the global day of action against war on 15 February 2003. That day has gone down in history.

The London ESF is taking place just two weeks before the US election. It will be a chance to show the world what we feel about Bush's warmongering policies and the support he has received from Blair. And it is an opportunity to discuss the big issues for our movement with anti war activists from round the world.

From Friday morning up to the demo on Sunday at 1pm there will be a host of international forums, rallies and debates on war including: End the occupation of Iraq What future for Palestine? Strategies for peace and global disarmament – against nuclear weapons and military bases The Hijab and islamaphobia The Iraq war – the faultline in British politics US imperialism and the elections The struggle for democracy in the Middle East and many, many more.

Speakers include Lindsey German from the Stop the War Coalition, Kate Hudson from CND, Anas Altikriti from the Muslim Association of Britain, Tony Benn, Ahmed Ben Bella, the leader of the Algerian independence movement, Palestinian activist Mustafa Barghouti, Rose Gentle mother of war victim Gordon Gentle, George Galloway and anti-war activists from round Europe and the world.

The ESF is at Alexandra Palace in north London and Bloomsbury in central London on 15–17 October. There will be music in Trafalgar Square at the end of Sunday's demo, finishing at 8pm. Registration costs £30/£20 unwaged. The first 20,000 to register before 1 October will get a free travelcard. To register and for more info go to www.fse-esf.org
